First Sunday of Lent

In Genesis, the serpent is one of God’s creatures – a cunning one, to be sure, but one of “the animals that the Lord God had made” (Gn 3:1). Nothing in Genesis explains why the serpent chooses to trick or tempt the two humans to disobey their Creator. In Matthew, Jesus is tempted by the devil, a figure that later Christian traditions associate with the serpent in the garden. The test in the wilderness is administered by the devil but initiated by God, as Matthew writes: “Jesus was led by the Spirit into the desert to be tempted” (Mt 4:1). Perhaps God is testing to see if his Son will succeed where Adam failed. Because Jesus stood firm against the devil’s seductions, “acquittal [that is, justification] and life came to all” (Rom 5:18). Lent invites us to meditate on our participation in both Adam and Christ. As the psalmist writes, “I acknowledge my offense” (Ps 51:3). We face honestly our guilt and the sins we have committed against God. But Lent also, paradoxically, invites us into the joy of our guilt being washed away. As Paul writes, “how much more will those who receive the abundance of grace and of the gift of justification come to reign” (Rom 5:17).
