Fifth Sunday in Ordinary Time

The prophet Isaiah presents the people of Israel with a simple proposition: if they help the poor and needy in their midst, God will immediately hear their prayers and heal them. The implication is clear. The people have not shared what they have with the hungry. They have not sheltered the homeless. They have not clothed the naked. Because of this, God refuses to hear them, leaving them in their self-inflicted gloom and darkness. But, Isaiah insists, if they turn away from false and malicious speech and satisfy the hunger of the afflicted, God's light will rise on them until it is as bright as high noon on a summer day.

Jesus also uses the metaphor of light to describe his disciples. They will shine before others not to bring glory to themselves but so that people will see their "good deeds" and give glory to God see (Mt 5:16). Elsewhere in Matthew's Gospel, Jesus makes clear what these good deeds might be: feeding the hungry, caring for strangers, clothing the naked, and visiting prisoners (see Mt 25:35-40).
