Third Sunday in Ordinary Time

“The LORD is my light,” sings the psalmist (Ps 27:1). As a metaphor, light represents many things: spiritual enlightenment, understanding, salvation. It reveals secrets kept hidden and signals the life and joy of spring after the silence and death of winter. The prophet Isaiah used light as a metaphor to signify God’s redemption of Israel after their defeat by Assyria (Zebulun and Naphtali were regions defeated by Assyria). Isaiah’s words likely celebrated the coronation of Hezekiah, the king who protected Jerusalem from Assyrian invasion; in their deeper meaning, they point forward to a king and a salvation of another kind. In Jesus’ teaching, preaching, and healing (Mt 4:23), Jesus ushers in God’s kingdom in all its radiance; its hope and joy after a long winter of foreign occupation and a high priesthood that bowed to Rome. Matthew points out that Jesus starts his ministry in the very territory once captured by Assyria. The heavy yoke of foreign rule that once burdened the people (see Is 8:4) will now be the light, easy yoke offered by Jesus’ way (Mt 11:29-30).
